

Critical thinking

Make clearer decisions based on the factors that really matter

Taking the right actions starts with making better choices. But how can you tune out distractions and get to the core of the issue? It takes critical thinking. The ability to think critically clarifies your decision-making process and keeps you focused on solving the challenge at hand. And like any skill, critical thinking requires training and practice to master. This course gets you started.

Course description

What will you learn

Everybody's got an opinion. But not all opinions are created equally. To make effective decisions that solve problems, you'll need to move beyond opinions and emotions alone and apply critical thinking. When you think critically, you put all relevant factors into perspective and identify what's really at stake. As a result, you're better positioned to achieve your goals.

Critical thinking isn't about making robotic calculations and strictly following the numbers. It also incorporates human factors, which are extremely relevant to your plan's success. Yet being a critical thinker lets you take bolder actions and overcome short-sighted decision-making which may be motivated by fear or resistance to change. This course provides you with the tools you'll need.

Program path

Some of the topics covered in this course include gaining the confidence and self-empathy to think independently, mastering problematic emotions and getting out of "fight or flight" mode, and putting facts into perspective along with relevant opinions and feelings. You will also work with case studies and games to boost your critical thinking skills, identify and correct common misconceptions about critical thinking, and understand causality while predicting the impacts of your decisions. Additionally, the course will teach you how to leverage constructive feedback using critical thinking.

Training method
